development. Perhaps even more so. The LEDO must be willing to advance community dialogue about education, workforce development, and many other issues relevant to Quality of Place. The workforce of today is mobile and if young professionals are to be attracted to fill the jobs of the future, communities must be willing to dialogue and reinvent themselves to facilitate economic transitions.

CONCLUSION

Madison, Indiana is a unique community with unique amenities. Like much of rural Indiana it is a community that does not appear to embrace change and change is needed. This is perhaps due in part to the amazing historic nature of Madison. The heritage, historic downtown, and the river are characteristics that set Madison apart and should be the foundation upon which a community-wide
